She is the daughter of a field overseer and union leader in a pineapple plantation on Oahu, Hawaii; he is the son of the chief stockholder of the corporation that owns the plantation.

However, their differing socio-economic backgrounds aren't enough to quell the love developing between Eden Andres and Ben Alexander in Yvonne McIntire's newest Christian romance novel, Nuiloa. Returning home to Oahu after two years in culinary school on neighboring island Maui, Eden was looking forward to the summer break, a time to earn some money at a summer job and to relax with her family. Her plans are changed when she meets Ben and romance blooms between them --to the concern of her family and others who care for her, who see Ben as "out of her league." As their relationship deepens, Eden discovers that Ben is conflicted by a past commitment he feels obligated to fulfill, creating a dilemma that will teach them both that forgiveness and redemption are possible for those who love God.
