Life is full of mysteries and secrets, it takes you places you never thought you'd go. Love and adventure, heartache and tears. Passion and discontent, ruby red shoes and fragile glass slippers. Where rain clouds produce rainbows, and every cloud has a silver lining (or so they say). Wrinkles and menopause steal our youth in a world of plastic vanity, as our empty nests leave us lonely, searching and scrambling for activities to fill our days and nights. Running from silence so loud it's deafening. Feeling too old to chase dreams and the love of someone half my age.

But too young to give up on love and silent dreams. Too old to feel young and too young to feel old. Yet the passion remains burning in the soul. Where is the charm in this midlife escapade? Some how, I venture to guess, I will continue the hunt for the rainbow I hope to climb, the one that will take me to the cloud with the silver lining. I found a release purely by accident, in the words that I began to write. Expressions so strong, the words flowed like a raging river. Show more Show
