Life as a wandering musician used to be easy for Tisik. Then his plan of wining, dining, and bedding his way across the fairy world is ruined when he's wrongfully accused of seducing a prince by magic--which happens to be illegal. Nido is assigned to Tisik as a guardian. His task is to bring Tisik to trial in the king's city. Nido too was convicted of a crime he didn't commit, so he's sympathetic to Tisik's situation. Not to mention that he finds Tisik irresistibly sexy. But Nido has to stay focused; if he fails to bring Tisik to trial, he'll be locked away in the catacombs again. As they travel, Tisik becomes convinced of a plot to frame him. Since he can't look forward to a fair trial, he decides to actually use his magic to seduce Nido and then run for it. And though it turns out Nido is all too willing to be seduced, the affection that follows catches each man by surprise. With the trial looming, Nido faces an impossible decision--send the man he loves to wrongful imprisonment, or sacrifice his own freedom.
